Benjamin Heazle senior was stationed in Hull with the 55th Regiment between 11 Sep 1818 and 14 Jul 1819.

The Citadel^[edit]

The Citadel was a result of extensive remodelling and civil engineering work on the former Hull Castle and South Blockhouse (1680s); a triangular artillery fort was created at the western bank of the Hull at its confluence with the Humber.^[27] Beckmann estimated the cost of the improvements at over £74,000 and eventually over £100,000 was expended on the works, 29 acres (0.12 km²) was acquired by the Crown for the expanded work.^[28]

The new fortification extended onto the old village of Drypool, and part of that village had houses built to the north of the village church, outside the Citadel.^[31] The Citadel was an irregular triangular fort, with curtain walls of 100 (east), 266 (south) and 258 (west) yards with bastions at each apex, each with wall lengths of around 100 yards. The Castle and south blockhouse were retained and incorporated into the north and western bastions respectively. The structure was surrounded by a broad moat on the eastern and western sides.^[32]

Military use of the Citadel ended by 1848, and it was transferred to the 'Commissioners of Woods and Forests' in 1858, and rented out to commerce. The Citadel was sold in 1863, and in 1864 the site was cleared for industrial and dock use.^[33]
